If you've been undecided about whether to upgrade your computer to Windows 10, here's a list of things you should consider. You can make some important decisions before your free trial period runs out.

Windows 10 comes with a lot of new features that people are really enjoying. Several new enhancements are designed around user experience, making tasks easier and improving the overall flow. There are some other things users are really liking too, especially if they're coming from Windows 8 or 8.1 where there was some confusion about how things worked.

Here's a list of 18 reasons you should consider making the jump to Windows 10:

Windows Update. Windows 10 brings significant changes to how updates are handled. For one thing, there is no more Patch Tuesday and it will be possible to defer updates for a few years if desired. There is also a new option called Active Hours that makes it possible to specify the time of day when rebooting won't happen. The Windows Store. As part of major changes in how Microsoft delivers software, the store will get regular updates and be the source for all applications going forward, including Office 365 and other products like Visual Studio and companion apps like OneNote and OneDrive.

Action Center. Windows 10 users now have a new way to monitor and limit notifications from various apps. You can now customize what gets shown on the Action Center, which you can access by swiping down from the top of the screen. The Control Panel. It's better organized, more powerful, and includes many new categories like Security Center for managing passwords and Control Panel Settings to manage wireless connections. Cortana. The personal digital assistant comes with Windows 10 and will offer additional capabilities like interaction with other Windows 10 devices across the home network; search; reminders; appointment reminders; weather; traffic; useful information for sports, food, shopping, health, travel, finance and general information like what you want to watch on TV.
